Wife Takes Back Husband After He Puts Child in Her Arms.

NEW YORK, April 13.—Mrs. Tessie Baines, of Brooklyn, nineteen years old, who tried to drown herself in Jamaica bay last Sunday because her husband, from whom she had separated, refused to let her see their baby and give it a few Easter presents, got both baby and husband back again yesterday in the Jamaica police court. She had been brought there to answer a charge of attempted suicide.

Mrs. Ranne told how she had gone East with a few trunks and with her husband had taken the gifts, thrown them out of a window and then put her out of doors. This, she said, was what had made her run straight for Jamaica bay, a mile and a half distant, and throw herself into the water.

"Cannot you two make up your differences?" asked Magistrate Conway, kindly.

Mrs. Ranne declared that she never would. August, the husband, was in court with the baby in his arms.

"You three go into my private room and talk it over," suggested the court.

"I'll give you half an hour."

Ranne had been pleading with his wife in the court room, and he started eagerly for the judge's chambers. Mrs. Ranne went more slowly. Before the door of the room closed behind them those in the court saw Ranne place the baby in his wife's arms.

In fifteen minutes they came out again. Ranne had the baby back again, but his wife's arm was linked in his, and the three of them were smiling.

CAPT. KOENIG IN GERMANY?

Letter From Deutschland's Commander Quoted in Cologne Paper.

THE HAGUE, April 13.—The Cologne Volkszeitung says Captain Koenig, of the merchant submarine Deutschland, is not in America, as reported in the French press. "The brave ocean submarine hero is fortunately in our own thankful fatherland," it goes on, "and wrote recently to a friend from Schlesien: 'Thanks to American politics, I am now on dry land in the true sense of the word.' Koenig asserts that after the war, when sense one more reigns in America—and America will be serious when it is a question of money and business—our trade connections will again be resumed in the same spirit as with England."

It has been asserted insistently by passengers on liners arriving from England that the Deutschland is a prize in a British port and Captain Koenig a prisoner.

PERIL OF CIVIL WAR HANGS OVER RUSSIA

People Outside Petrograd Believe Some Form of Monarchy Necessary.

PETROGRAD, April 13.—The greatest danger that could befall Russia would be a civil war. Agitation in favor of the immediate establishment of a republic holds sway, but there are still many elements in Russia which cannot reconcile themselves to the abolition of monarchy, though all except a few dreamers are opposed to a revival of the autocratic regime.

Outside Petrograd Russia largely remains faithful to the idea that Russia cannot exist without some form of monarchy. Four institutions exercise partly legislative, partly executive powers—the provisional government, the executive committee of the Duma, the military commissariat, and the committee of workmen's and soldiers' delegates—but with the exception of the last named they are working in cordial support of the new regime.

Signs of Weakness.

In the ranks of the committee of delegates signs of weakness have abounded during the last few days. A week ago the committee, pretending to fear a counter revolution, decided to arrest all the members of the executive committee of the Duma and the members of the provisional government.

Armed with an order of arrest and backed by some hundreds of the mandatories proceeded to the Tauris Palace. There they were met by the Preobrazhensky guard. As soon as the latter heard the object of their mission they curtly replied: "You want to arrest the Duma folk? Not much." The mandatories returned crestfallen.

Soldiers Laughed At Them.

Anxious to restore its prestige the committee then decided to arrest the former czar and bring him to the fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul. They sent to Tsaritsyn 150 soldiers fully armed and furnished with a written order. The soldiers on duty at the palace laughed in their faces but allowed them to have a glimpse of "Colonel Ramanoff" as he was walking through the grounds.

The committee wished to have Nicholas interned in the fortress in order to hold him as a hostage. The deputy commanding the fortress is a former officer. During the revolution he proclaimed himself an ardent republican in the service of the committee of workmen and soldiers, who selected him to be jailer of the former czar, but he had been dismissed from this post.

"Besides that," said Mr. Usher, "I will see that the family of every tenant who enlists is taken care of and does not suffer by the absence of the breadwinner. I am too old to do military service, but I want to do what I can to help this country win the war."

HERNDON TO BE A MUNICIPAL PHOENIX

Citizens, in Rebuilding Fire-Swept Town, Will Aim At the Modern.

Herndon, Va., the little town which was almost destroyed in a fire which swept its business section several weeks ago, is making plans for building a new and better Herndon. Dr. R. E. Robey, one of the citizens who took a prominent part in the fight against the flames, stated today that while active operations of rebuilding the town have not begun yet, the men who suffered in the loss of their business establishments are now considering plans for the future of the town.

Will Change Old Lines.

Herndon is one of the oldest towns in its section of Virginia, and the buildings showed how the growth of the village was slow and unplanned. Next to a modern new structure was found an old frame building of antebellum date, and across the street would be found a half-cement, half-wood structure which added to the nondescript appearance of the town.

The citizens planning to rebuild the town have decided that now is the time to make Herndon one of the most modern towns in Virginia.

The services of landscape architects have been engaged, with the services of building architects who will co-operate among themselves and the citizens in giving the town a uniform yet beautiful appearance.

As yet, all traces of the fire have not been removed. From the station of the Washington and Old Dominion railway is seen a mass of blackened embers, with here and there a chimney poking its ugly head above the pile of ruins.

Insurance Yet Unsettled.

As soon as the insurance has been settled, laborers about the town will hitch their mules to their carts and will load the ruins upon four wheels and take it out to some nearby field, where they will be left to bleach in the old sun. And at the same time freight cars loaded with bricks and timber will draw up to the one siding the town boasts, and a crew of skilled carpenters will be set to work building a new and better Herndon.
